One of the workmen should to the boys to come down, and Martin did so but not in the usual method of descending a ladder. The barrow tipped upon its side and the little fellow fell sixteen feet, striking upon a coal tub which lay upside down under the staging. The injuries were mostly confined to the head and face, several cuts being received upon the forehead and near the mouth. Three of the front teeth were lossened by the fall. The little fellow was weak from the fall, but no fears are entertained of serious results from the injury. Hugh Allison's two sons, one fifteen tained of serious results from the injury will be about as successful as they were in Ohio and Massachusetts.

The English Central and Associated Chambers of Agriculture recently held a meeting in London at which the Iarmers generally took the ground that about the only cure for the present depression existing in England is protection. This testimous coming from the very class of people who the free traders of this country assert derive no benefit from protection, and at a time when the free trade organs are urging a raid on the tariff, naturally chough disconcerts the advocates of the disastrous free trade theories. The great cry of the free trade organs is to open up the markets of the world, but it appears that the English agriculturists, who have enjoyed all the benefits of this canada would reap a very rich harvest from such an arrangement. An interview with Mr. Alexander Gibson, the so-called lumber and cotton king of the Provinces, published in the St. John Tetegraph, contains some pregnant truths, to which we invite the attention of the readers of The Wing. He says:

I believe unrestricted trade, with the United States would be a great (blessing to Canada. As a manufacturer of cotton I would not fear competition from the American manufacturers of that article. Why should I? At the present time the raw material costs me only a small fraction more than It does the mill owners of the United States. Then, we have no such taxes to pay as they have. Why, do you know, that some of the New England cotton factories are taxed $30,000 or more each? When our Mr. Williams—our runner, as he is called—was in the United States are taxed $30,000 or more each? When our Mr. Williams—our runner, as he is called—was in the United States are faved so the make and price of American ections. His report on his rearm home was that we can make as good an article as the United States people can for a fees figure. In other words there is so much difference in the cost of our goods and till he able to sell in the United States market at as low as figure as the mill owners there.

There is no doubt that it would be "a great blessing to Canada" should she be given free access to our market with her goods manufactured at so low a cost, but how about the cotton manufacturers of the States? They have bullt up a great industry, campley a large number of hands to

The forty thousand third party prohibitionists in New York should hold a mass meeting and congratulate themselves on the fact of having elected a brower as Secretary of State. Consistent men, however, will have considerable difficulty in discovering any advancement of the cause of temperance in the result.

The Rev. Edwin Thompson strongly disapproves the attitude of the Third Party Prohibitionists, and denounces as absurd the attempt to compare them with the old Abolition party, of which he was a conspicuous leader. The Prohibitionists seem to him to desire the defeat of their own frieads if the latter huppen to be Republicans, and he thinks that if the Abolitionists had pursued such an insane policy

COMMERCIAL UNION OR ANNEXATION What the St John Globe Says

Boston Nov 26 A St John N B special to the Herald says - The Globe to night quotes Mr Atkinson's second letter to the New York Chamber of Commerce to the New York Chamber of Commerce in regard to the purchase of the Martime provinces by the United States and remarks that unevation cannot be successful until the people make up their minds that it is desirable. No doubt it would be better for the Ymelican people and for the Canadhan people and it would not be to the disadvantage of Great Britlan if all the bigilal spenking people on this continent were united with one great nation. The great objection to annexation is a purely sentimental one. There is a feeling sentimental one. There is a feeling that Fugland uight feel hurt by any expression of desire on our part to exchange her flag for another, but an expression from her that sla had no objection would add very largely to the number of people in the Maritime Prov mees who now believe that amenation is their ultimate destiny. If these Prov-nces of themselves decided to enter the Ameri an Umon and become self govern ing States Ontario and Quebe have to follow that these Provinces nave to follow. That these Provinces might act of themselves is quite within the hounds of possibility and if they did act of themselves and for themselves Canada and Great Britain could not stop them any more than they can stop our people from now removing it to the United States.

COUNTESS NARONA

CHAPTER XX. "Shall I see you again?" she asked, as she held out her hand to take leave. "It is quite understood between us, I suppose, about the understood netween us, I suppose, about the plays?

Frames recalled his extraordinary experience of that evening in the renumbered room.

"My stay in Venice is uncertain," he replied.

"If you have anything more to say about this dramatic venture of yours, it may be as well to say it now. Have you decided on a subject already! I know the public tasts in England better than you do—I might save you some waste of time and trouble, if you have not chosen your subject wisely!"

"I don't cure what subject I write about so long as I write, "she answered carelessly. "If you have got a subject in your bend give it to me. I answer for the characters and the dialogue."

to me. I mayer for the characters and the dialogue."

"You answer for the characters and the dialogue," Francis repeated "That's a hold way of speaking for a beginner! I wonder if I could shake your sublime confidence in yourself if I suggested the most tickish subject to landle which is known to the stago? What io you say, countess, to entering the lists with Shakespeare and trying a drama with a ghost in it! A true story, mind! founded on events in this very city, in which you and I are interested."

She caught him by the urn and draw him.

you and I are interested."

She caught him by the arm and drew him away from the coloniade into the solitary mildle super of the square. "Now tell me," she said, cagerly, "Hore, where nobody is near us. How am I interested in it! How? how?"

she said, eagenly. "Hore, where nobody is near us. How am I interested in it? How? how?"

Still holding his arm, she shook him in her inpatience to hear the coming, disclosure. For a moment he besitated. Thus far, amused by her ignorant belief in herself, he had merely spoken in jest. Now, for the first time, impressed by her irresistihle earnestness, he began to consider what he was about from a more serious point of view. With her knowledge of all that had passed in the old palace, before it transformation into a hotel, it was surely possible that they might suggest some explaintion of what had happened to his brother and sister and himself. Or, failing to do that, she might accidentally reveal tome event in her own experience, which, acting as a limit to a compotent dramatist, might prove to be the making of a play. The prosperity of his theatre was his one serious object in life. "I may be on the track of another 'Corsican Brothers," he thought. "A new place of that sort would be £10,000 in my pocket at least."

With these motives (worthy of the single hearted devoluin to dramatic business which made Francis a successful manager) he related without further hesitation, what his own experience had been, and what the oxperience of his relatives had been, in the haunted totel. He even described the outbreak of superstitions terror which had escaped Mrs. Norbury's ignorant maid. "Sad stoff, if you look at it reasonably," he remarked. "But there is something dramatic in the notion of the ghostly influence making itself felt by the relatious in succession, as they one after another outer the fatal room-until the one chosen relative comes who will see the unearthly creature and know the terrible truth. Material for a play, countess—flux rato material for a play; the fatal room-until the one chosen relative comes who will see the unearthly creature and know the terrible truth. Material for a play; to the stoop down the this utmost ingenuity had failed to anticipate. She stood by bis side—just as sic stoop before Agu

Too a muster to ner mover the might as rell have spolen to the dead "Smely," he said, "you are not foolish nough to take what I have been telling you

"Sin ely," he said, "you are not foolish enough to take what I have been chling you senously?"

Her lips moved slowly. As it seemed, she was making an effort to speak to him.

"Louder," he said, "I can't hear you."

She struggled to recover possession of herself. A faint light began to soften the dell, cold stare of her eyes. In a moment more she spoke so that he could hear her.

"I never thought of the other world," she marcanred, in Jow, dell tones like a woman talking in her sleep.

Her mind had gone hack to the day of her last memorable interview with Agnes; she was slowly recalling the confession that had escaped her, the warrung worls which she had spoken at that past time. Necessarily meapable of understanding this, Francis looked at her in perplexity. She went on in the same duly accunt tone, steadily following out her, own train of thought with her heedless eyes on his face, and her wandering mind far away from him.

"I said some trifling event would bring us together the next time. I was wrong. No trifling event will bring us together. I said

"I said some triding event would bring us together the next time. I was wrong No trading event will bring us together. I said I might be the person who told her what had become of Perrart, if she forced me to it. Shail I feel some other influence than hers? Will he force mu to it? When she sees him, shall I see hun too?"

"Damell's?"

Ho led her on slowly. She accompanied him in silence as far as the end of the Prazetta. There when the full view of the moonlit Lagoon revealed itself, she stopped him as he turned toward the Riva degli Schiavoni. "I have something to ask you. I want to wait and think." She recovered her lost idea after a long

"Are you going to sleep in the room to-night?" she asked. He told her that another traveler was in possession of the room that night. "But the manager has reserved it for me to-morrow," he added, "if I was to have it."
"No," she said; "you must give it up,"
"To whom?"

OIL STOVES.

"To me."

He started. "After what I have told you, do you really wish to sleep in that from bearing the control of the started. "I must sleep in it."

"Are you not a fraid?"

"I am borribly a fraid?"

"So I should have thought after what I have observed in you to might. Why should you take the room I you are not obliged to eccupy it unless you like."

"So I should have thought after what I have observed in you to might. Why should you take the room? You are not obliged to eccupy it unless you like."

"I was not observed in you to might. Why should you take the room and keep the room until?"—She broke off at those words. "Nover mind the rest," she said. "It was useless to dispute with her. Francis changed the subject. "We can do nothing to indepth to manufacture the Cable, or endless travelling, Cash Capt?"

They moved on again to the botal. As tt then."

They moved on again to the hotel As they approached the door Fruncis asked if alse was staying in Venice under her own name. She shock her head, "as Four brother's widow I am known here. I want to be known this time to strangers in Venice; I am traveling under a common English name." She hesitated, and stood still "What has come to me?" she muttered to herself. "Some things I remember and some I forget. I forget Daniel's—and now I forget my English name."

She draw him hurriedly into the hall of the sine."

She drew him harriedly into the hall of the hotel, on the wall of which hang a list of vistors' names. Running her finger slowly down the list, she pointed to the English hame she had assumed—"Mrs. James."

"Remember that when you call to morrow," she said. "My hoad is heavy. Good night."

Francis went back to his own hotel, wondering what the events of the next day would bring forth. A new turn in his affairs had taken place in his absence. As he crossed the hall he was requested by me of the servante to walk into the private office. The manager was waiting there with a grevely preoccupied manner, as if he had something serious to say. He vegrutted to hear that Mr. Francis Westwick had, like other mambers of the family, discovered mysterious sources of discomfort in the new hotel. He had been informed in strict confidence of Mr. Westwick's extraordinary objection to the atmosphere of the bedroom upstairs. Without presuming to discuss the matter, he must beg to be accused from reserving the room for Mr. Westwick after what had happened.

Fruncis answered sharply, a little ruffled by the tone in which the manager had spoken to him. "I might, very possibly, have declined to sleep in the room if you had reserved it." he said. "Bo you what net to leave the hotel?" The manager saw the error that he had committed and hastened to repair it. "Certainly not, sir! We will do our best to make you comfortable while you stay with as I beg your pardem if I have said anything to offend you. The reputation of an establishment like this is a matter of very serious importance. May I hope that you will do us the great favor to say nothing about what has happened up stairs? The two French gentlemen have kindly promised to keep it a secret." This apology left Francis no polite alternative but to grant the manager's request. "There is an end to the countess' wild scheme," he thought to himself, as he retired for the night. "So much the better for the countess!"

The habit of cautiousness is not as a general thing, inborn, but is the result of a naturally generous and confiding nature repeatedly victimized by the cunning and crafty. So the many disappointments, and often injurious affects, arising from the use of various vaunted remedles, have induced an undue cautiousness, and, in many ca-es, entire abandonment of the use of any. We call attention to the remedies of Dr. R. Y. Pierce, of Buffalo, which physicians are employing in their practice with the most beneficial results.
